

THE EVENING STAR.

WASHINGTON, September 3, 1892.

CROSSY'S NOTES. Editor.

THE EVENING STAR has a regular and permanent circulation in Washington three times larger than that of any other paper in the city. As a local newspaper and advertising medium it has no competitor.

The material thing in the controversy over authority between state and nation in the pending question of the introduction of cholera is the exclusion of the disease, and not the vindication of anybody's rights except the people. The New York health officer is perhaps technically right in his position, because both the Attorney General of the United States and the acting general of the state of New York, after examination of the points in dispute, say so, and the law itself—that is, the federal law—appears to vest no exclusive jurisdiction in the United States. In such matters, where consequent action is required by the state of the law and public interests demand, some positive determination of the question of jurisdiction which shall prevent the clashing of authority and insure the greatest efficiency, the enlargement of the national jurisdiction is absolutely necessary. The Attorney General admits the necessity when he says that if the health officer denounces the President's circular he would advise the call of a special session of Congress within ten days. The health officer has not let the public remain in the dark as to his intentions. He will disregard the lately promulgated program for the exclusion of infected vessels and persons if in any respect he deems it either to exceed or to fall short of what he considers proper provision for the occasion. Now, in such a moment as this, with a dreadful invasion impending and with an immense territory to protect under grave disadvantages, there should be no conflict of authority and the public without recourse to technicalities in the case, will not excuse the man or men through whose hands the cholera is increased. But the public will also insist that the present uncertainty cannot continue and must be stopped as soon as possible. There is one constitutional mode of putting a stop to it—the passage by Congress in extra or regular session of a statute that shall give the national authorities all the powers in the premises that this or any similar crisis requires to be vested in them.

It is evident that no overstatement was made by Washington of the extraordinary number of veterans who would crowd to the capital at the Grand Army encampment, or of the expense that their entertainment would involve. The city has provided free quarters for an army greater in numbers than either of those which on successive days marched up Pennsylvania avenue in 1865 in grand review, a number far greater than that thus supplied by any of Washington's predecessors as entertainer of the Grand Army. Upon the extensive quarters that have been erected the committee has expended all its available money, and the time within which to build and furnish additional structures is lacking, as well as the pecuniary means. Every inch of the free quarters is now allotted to and will be utilized by men of the Grand Army, and some provision will be made somehow for all who have applied prior to September 1, the time within which, as the ports were notified, it was necessary for Washington to know the exact number of its free guests, in order that it might make provision for them. An army of veterans nearly as large as that supplied with free quarters has been provided by the committee with reasonably cheap lodging places, and as there is still ample accommodation of this sort the army will doubtless largely increase before the encampment takes place. Between these two armies of visiting soldiers and their families and friends Washington's population will, it seems, at least be doubled.

According to the Atlanta Journal "Atlanta is the cleanest city for its size on the globe" in the United States. In the editorial it is pointed out that the imperviousness of double doors that Atlanta needs a thorough cleaning at once. Here perhaps is a well-earned fact noted with an apparent contradiction. A city may be comparatively clean and absolutely the reverse in places, which is the case with Washington, so far as certain things are concerned.

The reader of periodical literature is struck with the increasing value placed on current questions of political interest. Take either one of the great reviews printed in New York, which lead the American periodical press of their class, and the table of contents bulges with the titles that suggest increasing public attention to all that category of subjects denominated public questions. The literary paper, which was formerly the staple, is now often omitted altogether. While the labor problem, ballot reform, religious tendencies, immigration, transportation, sanitation and the like figure conspicuously, perhaps a topic receives wholly so good a treatment at the hands of public attention as education, especially the higher or university training. This is one of the most hopeful signs of the times. "We must educate" is as clearly the slogan of America today as it was of some of Henry Ward Beecher's talks from the platform forty or fifty years ago.

The Baltimore police are making a house to house inspection. The regular inspection of premises, especially of premises on alleys and back streets, is desirable and even necessary as a means to health at ordinary times. Just now, with an epidemic in Europe and vessels quarantined for cholera in the chief seaport of the country, it is the height of wisdom to keep all of our citizens clean. The best mode is by over-sight of the particular premises, either private residences or places of business, and no good citizen can object to reasonable and reasonable inspection by police officers and special officers of the health department. The Star's exposure yesterday, with previous information from the same source, and the knowledge of all observant persons who have occasion to go about around the city, shows a state of affairs requiring such examination.

A Washington correspondent may be regarded with charity when he "fakes" during the dull season when he is compelled to write against space. But there is no excuse for a deliberate damaging misrepresentation of facts such as has been sent from this city with reference to the G. A. R. encampment.

Famine and cholera have made war upon Russia and prevented Russia from making war upon her neighbors. But pestilence as a peace-promoter is worse than the war which it obviates. The forces of destruction now sweeping from Russia move far more rapidly than an army, their attack is far less avoidable and far more deadly, and they threaten the new world as well as the old.

New York did not get the world's fair, but she can cover herself with glory by erasing up an effective barrier between this country and the cholera.

A political discussion at Conway, Ark., resulted in a shooting affair. The Sullivan-Corbett method of joint debate has much to commend it.

A "Don't" for the New York World—"Don't try to send men on board a cholera-infected ship. One individual may carry the disease to thousands."

With five tickets in sight and a sixth about to appear on the horizon the Texas voter will have a fine range of choice this year.

The most radical antagonist of protection doesn't want free trade in cholera germs.

Some of the New York people spell their health officer's name Jenkins.
